The apartment feels more spacious? Internet overflow with home furnishing tips, but the sheer influx of tips can feel both overwhelming and controversial. Furniture trends are coming. They're funny. You want to because you doesn't like the terrazzo table? It's a no-mess confetti party for every meal, and you're just human. However: nine million tonnes of furniture is revived annually in landfills. That's about 2 million elephants, or 45,000 blue whales. So how can you enjoy new trends in décor without getting into terrible abstract animal metrics? There is a rub. Salvie is easy: used furniture. Most design trends have made the rounds before. The bright and meandering Memphis style is currently saturated with your Insta feed for the first piqued 1980s-90s. Terrazzo's surfaces popped-off in the 1950s, and minimalism was here long before Marie Kondo (no shadow, we love you, MK!). This means that your dream chair have waited for you for decades, and are just a click on Craigslist, eBay, or Sotheby's. Perhaps you crave the décor of tie paint. Or maybe you make as Dakota Johnson (ah, ad home tour, which started a thousand Tweets "le swoon") and scope retailers like 1stDibs for a Mid-Century coffee table. Or perhaps you crave a wildcard element out of goodwill (yep, they're online). Regardless of your needs, consider if your used furniture retailer to cheat the sheet. Sheet.
